

DINNER TIME

Why bother with kitchen & mealtime training?

Because you want to teach your dog not to be underfoot while you are busy in the kitchen, and not to beg for food or steal food off the counter or table.

But train when you have time for it. Thanksgiving Dinner, for example, is probably not the ideal day for dog training. On such occasions, crate your dog or put him in his confinement area with a good bone or chewie.

While cooking.

Decide the following:

- Where will your dog be while you cook?
(On his mat or bed? On the other side of a baby gate? In his crate or confinement area?)
- What will your dog be doing?
(Lying down? Chewing a bone? Unstuffing a Kong or rolling a treat ball or solving a puzzle toy?)
- How will you handle things like dropped food or food sitting on the counter?
(Leave it? Using a baby gate to prevent his access?)

Prepare tasty treats to reward your dog for doing whatever you decided to ask him to do. Remember to reward calm behavior often.

During dinner.

Decide the following:

- Where will your dog be during your dinner?
(On his mat or bed? On the other side of a baby gate? In his crate or confinement area?)
- What will your dog be doing during your dinner?
(Lying down? Chewing a bone? Unstuffing a Kong or rolling a treat ball or solving a puzzle toy?)
- What will you do if he jumps on you or tries to get food off the table?
(Tell him to leave it? Put him behind a baby gate, or in his confinement area?)

Prepare tasty treats to reward your dog for doing whatever you decided to ask him to do. Remember to reward calm behavior often. Keep your treats handy so you can get to them easily.

After the meal.

Assess how the training went.

- What did your dog do well?
- What needs extra practice?
- Is there anything you want to do differently next time?
